For Organisations

We spend a large part of our lives at work. What we experience there — our relationships, habits, ways of communicating, pressure, uncertainty, and whether we feel a sense of place and meaning — naturally influences our wellbeing.

I offer companies, associations and other organisations interactive workshops on psychology and workplace wellbeing, giving teams time to understand, reflect, exchange and step back from what they experience in their everyday working lives.

Workshops – CHF 750.– per half-day

A half-day workshop of around three hours can be organised around a topic from my existing courses, including:

- stress, anxiety and depression;
- identity and subjective wellbeing;
- understanding our emotions and reactions;
- cognitive psychology: attention, perception, thoughts and biases;
- motivation and engagement;
- communication and listening;
- understanding difficult situations and responding to them more effectively;
- the foundations of psychology and how the brain works.

Each workshop combines accessible psychological knowledge with real-life situations, practical exercises and discussion. The aim is for participants to recognise the concepts in their own experience and leave with useful points of reference that they can genuinely apply.

My approach focuses particularly on what happens upstream of difficulties: the small signals, habits, relationships, perceptions and working conditions that can gradually influence how we feel and function.

Greater understanding can create a little more space: between a situation and our reaction, between two people who see things differently, or simply between what we feel and what we decide to do with it.

This approach is educational and preventive. It does not include diagnosis, treatment or psychotherapeutic intervention.

Something specific to your organisation?

Every working environment is different. I also design bespoke workshops and programmes around a situation, question or need that is specific to your organisation.

We begin with a conversation about what you are observing and what you would like to explore or develop. I then create an intervention adapted to your context, your teams and your objectives.

Bespoke projects are quoted individually according to the research and preparation required, the number of participants and the duration of the programme.
